Course Title: Media and the Family
Course Description: Media - whether it's streaming movies, social media, video games, or music - is an ever-present aspect of modern American family life. Rapid changes in technology have dramatically changed the variety and accessibility of media that families have at their disposal. This technological advance now allows family members to access almost any type of media at any time on multiple devices. This course will examine many aspects of contemporary media, its consumption by individuals and families, and the effect it potentially has on family interaction and human development across the lifespan.
